

Does Lush sell shampoo bar tins?

Lush sells shampoo bar tins ($3.95) in two shapes: square and round. They're compact and great for traveling. It's recommended to stand your shampoo bar up to dry before putting them away in the case.

Is lush a good shampoo bar?

Money Report: Compared to a Pantene Pro-V, Lush is not that much more money for going zero-waste. Otherwise, it is not the cheapest bar out there -- in fact, it's the priciest so far! Not every ounce is created equal (even though that's how we have to analyze it) since it only took a teeny tiny bit to get suds in our hair with the Lush Shampoo Bar.

What are solid shampoo bars?

Solid shampoo bars were invented by Lush co-founder Mo Constantine and cosmetic chemist Stan Krysztal. They are a great alternative to liquid shampoos which take more energy and water to create and they are entirely plastic free. Our plastic free shampoo bars are also self-preserving which means that they contain no synthetic preservatives.

What size lush shampoo bars do you use?

The "medium" size is a perfect fit for standard-size LUSH shampoo bars like Godiva, and Seanik, and I'm able to force the conditioner bars in there as well with a bit of determination. I also use these for bobby pins, hair ties, pills, and other small items in my travel bag.

How clean is lush shampoo bar?

Almost clean. Despite being a bar, this Lush Shampoo bar contains SLS (!) as well as fragrance. No animal testing for both the Lush product and its ingredients. Packaging: We actually bought ours in an actual store! So it just came in a compostable paper bag.

Are there alternatives to lush solid conditioner bars?

As with the solid shampoo, there are alternatives to Lush solid conditioner bars, and the ones I've tried (like this gorgeous-smelling hand-made lavender and lime solid conditioner) seem to work pretty much the same. None have come close to replicating the results from standard bottled conditioner, which is rather frustrating.
