

What happened to the shares of Solid Power?

Since the end of last Friday's trading session, shares of Solid Power plummeted 28.6% as of the market's close on Friday. On Tuesday, investors learned that Douglas Campbell, Solid Power's CEO, is retiring, thus leaving his position at the company's helm, effective immediately.

Is solid power a good stock to buy?

Despite the stock's volatility and overvaluation, Solid Power's partnerships with Ford, BMW, and SK Innovation position it for potential growth in the solid-state battery market. The company's liquidity and a $50 million DoE award support its production goals, but competition from Toyota and Honda poses significant risks.

Is solid power a good speculative growth stock?

Solid Power, which aims to disrupt the conventional battery industry with its solid-state battery offerings, is a speculative growth stock that should only attract investors comfortable with a healthy dose of risk. Scott Levine has no position in any of the stocks mentioned. The Motley Fool has no position in any of the stocks mentioned.

Is Solid Power's stock performing poorly?

Despite the S&P 500 gaining around 1.1% this week, Solid Power's stock (SLDP) has been losing ground, dropping by 12.27%. This downturn can be attributed to a shakeup in the company's leadership and a bearish outlook from Wall Street, which has been too influential for the bulls to counteract.

Why is solid power stock rallying?

The sector moving full-speed ahead with SSB demo lines is a considerable positive for Solid Power and the more likely reason the stock is rallying. The biggest risk for the company is having the wrong partners. In addition, BMW moved away from the demo car in 2024 using the SSB from Solid Power.

What is solid power's future?

Solid Power is advancing SSB technology with partners like BMW and SK On, but faces challenges with declining EV demand and partner setbacks. The future hinges on new electrolyte production facilities and potential positive customer interest, with significant cash reserves to support operations until 2026/27.
